

ABSTRACT

A child is a person under 18 (eighteen) years of age, including a child still in the womb. The definition of a child is primarily concerned with understanding children so that they can live, grow, develop, and participate optimally in accordance with the essence and dignity of humanity

Child protection is defined as all efforts made to create conditions that allow children to exercise their rights and obligations for the proper development and growth of children, both physically, mentally, and socially. Child protection embodies justice in a society, and thus child protection is pursued in various areas of national and social life. Child protection activities have legal consequences, both in relation to written and unwritten law. The law serves as a guarantee for child protection activities.

Law Number 11 of 2012 concerning the Juvenile Criminal Justice System (SPPA) regulates the entire process of resolving cases of children in conflict with the law, from the investigation stage to post-sentence counseling. This law aims to protect specific legal rights within the justice system
